

JULIE AND ADELE AUDITION PIECE

JULIE, 17, is absorbed in a K-Pop track, fantasising about DARREN, whose name is scribbled all over the bus shelter. She doesn't notice ADELE approaching. Styling it out, she picks an imaginary piece of fluff off her school uniform, the music cutting as she removes her headphones.

JULIE

Ahhhh. Hiya, Del!

ADELE

Hiya, Jules!

JULIE slides her phone out of her pocket.

JULIE

Shall we?

ADELE

It'd be rude not to.

ADELE drops her bag to the floor in readiness for a TikTok routine they clearly perform every day.

JULIE

Welcome to episode thirty-one of The Binfluencers [where I, Jules], [and I, Del], take you on a journey from glamour to gutter. Today, I'm wearing a pleather Primark jacket with a broken zip and a nice hole under the arm, courtesy of a trampolining accident three years ago. Of course, the beauty here is that I can't quite raise my arms because it's two sizes too small. Hair tie from... I think I found it on the changing room floor at the swimming pool.

JULIE gives her hair tie a sniff.

Yeah, it still smells of chlorine.

ADELE

Knitted cardigan with tiny blob of egg yolk down the front; model's own. Not just a hand-me-down, but a hand-me-hand-me-hand-me-down from my Grandma. It's very versatile, the garish colours guaranteed to clash with everything.

JULIE

Not forgetting a pair of worn-out Matalan school shoes with soles so wafer thin you can feel every grain of gravel through them, but there's no point in getting new shoes until it's the new school year, right?

ADELE

Right. Join us again in a couple of days for more fashion advice on the Binfluencers!